

Dave Segó Builders, Inc.

Dave Segó founded his company in 1988, but he has 30 years experience in the construction industry. "I grew up on job sites as a kid, working there during the summers," he says. "My father was a general contractor and mason. I worked for him as a mason and saw the potential in homebuilding. Then I took it a step further."

Growing up on the east side of Indianapolis, with "Hancock County in our backyard," it wasn't a surprise that Dave located his business in Hancock County. "The old east side of Indianapolis has moved to New Palestine, and that's where I have done a lot of work over the years," he says.

Greenfield-based Dave Segó Builders offers customers many advantages, including ready accessibility to Dave and answers to their questions, assistance in working with financial institutions, commitment to producing a quality product that meets the customer's budget, schedule and expectations and follow-through after the home is built. "I never build the same home twice," Dave says. "We work directly with each client to give them the home of their dreams. Our business has grown by word-of-mouth from our customers over the years. I have two families that I have built every member of the family a home. That's all based on our reputation."

Dave has built several spec homes in Cricket Reel in Greenfield and in Stoneridge, between Greenfield and Indianapolis, but most are built on contract and range from $250,000 to $2 million. One of his homes won the Platinum Award in the $630,000 to $850,000 category in the 2008 Hancock County New Home Tour.
